Who Should Attend?

Childhood cancer survivors; their parents and siblings; school nurses, teachers, counselors, student nurses, and health professionals seeking to understand cancer survivorship from the survivor's perspective and the resources available to deal with some of the current issues that survivors face.

Children's Cancer Network

invites you to discover the world of pediatric cancer survivorship as it relates to the survivors themselves and their families. This is a multi-track conference with one track for parents and teen/young adult survivors and one track for school aged survivors. The parent and teen/young adult survivor track includes information related to potential physical and emotional issues and keys to dealing with these issues. The school aged survivorship track involves hands on projects with Beads of Courage and Creative Arts in Healing as well as some short discussions related to pertinent survivorship issues. In both tracks, emphasis will be placed upon ways to cope with these survivorship issues and the related resources available to childhood cancer survivors and their families. 🌸
